Approved For Release 2004/05/05 : CIA-RDP84B00890R000300030010-3

1. What is needed is a rewrite of the espionage law so that any person, regardless of position, who divulges secrets (sources or methods) can be put in jail. Espionage laws should have teeth whereby CIA could sue under criminal law:

employees

retirees

newspapermen

clergy

congressmen

mothers and children

STAT
ILLEGIB

2. The Secrecy Agreement should be made enforceable under law (criminal/espionage). It should be strengthened so that officers like Snepp d [ ] could be prevented from publishing, based on a violation of their Secrecy Agreement. Prosecution should be under criminal or civil law. [ ]

3. There should be no controls after termination of employment other than those enforceable <sup>by</sup> law under the Secrecy Agreement or the espionage laws. Any controls placed on retirees would only ensure that the "honest" people would report while the "dishonest" would not. We would be preaching to the choir--not the sinners.

4. We do not feel a Code of Ethics would be that effective, but would represent a band-aid solution--not a cure. What is needed is stronger and enforceable laws. If there is to be a Code of Ethics, than it should be such that all U.S. Government agencies should have the same.
